

In this issue

We are pleased to release the last issue of the Volume 8, 2010. In the last eight years, the Journal of Digital Information Management (JDIM) has grown significantly in terms of content, quality, papers, coverage, indexing and review. The impact of the publications has been improving remarkably in the last few years. The papers are blind reviewed to ensure objectivity and scholarly content. The JDIM gratefully appreciates the authors for their scholarly contributions, reviewers for their highly objective and systemic reviewing and users for supporting in terms of access and usage.

The JDIM is now moving into a new platform of computing portal DLINE. (<http://www.dline.info>). This platform enables seemingly scalable navigation and federated search of the papers including back files. We do hope that the new platform would serve the end users in terms of enhanced access.

The acceptance rate of JDIM has now come down to less than 20%. The papers in 2010 have a mean review of 3.36 reviewers per paper and better mean review scores.

We assure high standard content, and innovative technology and research in digital information processing and technology in the coming years.

Editors