NEW JOURNAL OF INFORMATION SECURITY RESEARCH

Welcome to the first issue of the international Journal of Information Security Research (JISR). We are very glad to be able to offer this publication in both electronic and printed formats.

The information security field has grown significantly in recent years as a consequence of our increased dependency on computer systems and globally connected networks.

The number of publications addressing various information security issues and topics are in constant rise, but we believe that there is a need for scholarly journal specially dedicated to theoretical and applied research in the Information Technology security related fields.

The Journal aims to be an internationally recognized scholarly forum attracting authors and audience from both the academic and industrial communities. Papers offering original and innovative research contributions in information systems security and related domains are solicited for submission. The primary focus is on original, high quality, unpublished research and implementation related contributions.

We especially strive to attract the authors who, in their papers, exercise highest level of scientific rigour and provide the assurances of complete reproducibility of the experimental findings.

We also encourage submissions of papers discussing: industrial research and development, and socio-legal issues related to information security.

Sincerely,

Dr. Victor Ralevich, JISR Editor-in-Chief
